The Big Test

Mr Rosseve's lates bushed message is given over largely to a lecture on the things which make budgeting touch. That pro es something about Mr Recognisell

When he was running for the presidency In 1962 and Mr Hoover wasn't having any luck making ends meet Mr Roosevelt told him how it should be done. Mr Roosevel a firs, budget year ented h wever with a deficit of almost four billion dollars

The deficit was close to five billion the next year For the year which ends next June 30 the deficit is expected to ap proach three billion. Mr Roosevelt is find ing that budgeting is tough something he apparently never know before

This is important to the country which wants to believe that Mr Poosevelt some how will be able to full the fixed chestnuts out of the fire before they go up in smake The uncomfortable fact is that unless Mr Received is able to do it it wont be The President la responsible for finance

He makes the recommendations and has the last word on authorizations for approprintions More than that his philosophy sole the page for congress and for the ites sure groups which exert influence on con

Mr Roosevelt knows now what it is that makes hudgeting a hard unpleasant and seemingly impossible task. He admits the prospects are dank for the current year but they siways were. He foresors another deficit in the next fiscal year moreover un less relef expenditures can be held to $1 500 000 000 and unless approximately half a billion can be pared off catimales of departmental needs

The outlook ient bright. The time is not sight when the United States will be able to live within its income again yet itt cannot confinue deficit operations in definitely

Mr Roosevelt's tank-the first genuine challenge to his leadership-is to show his administration how to preserve the financial foundation without which the rost of his program would be meaningless. There is no part of that program which cannot be abandoned with impunity for the sake of the thing which makes government possible in the first place-sound financing

It is the one responsibility which no President of the United States can evade because it is at the root of all the other responsibilities he assumes
